

You are invited to join

Margaret Fuller Society

"Male and female represent the two sides of the great radical dualism. . . . There is no wholly masculine man, no purely feminine woman."

– Margaret Fuller

The Margaret Fuller Society is a nonprofit educational organization founded to study and stimulate interest in the life and work of Margaret Fuller, the revolutionary journalist, feminist, transcendentalist, novelist, critic, essayist, and translator. We provide a forum for the exchange of scholars, students, and others who are interested in Fuller's significant contributions to American and transatlantic nineteenth-century literature, culture, and history.

The Society meets in conjunction with the annual conference of the American Literature Association and arranges other programs, including a panel at the annual Modern Language Association convention. We notify all members of our events and encourage them to submit papers to our panels.

We publish an extended electronic newsletter, "Conversations," twice a year and maintain a website that appeals to both scholarly and general interests.

To join and learn more about the society visit:
<http://margaretfullersociety.org>

Margaret Fuller Society

In addition to studying and encouraging interest in the work and life of Margaret Fuller, the Society maintains a connection with the Margaret Fuller Neighborhood House (MFNH). The MFNH is a National Historic Landmark and the only American author's birthplace in service to the local community. Founded in 1902, the MFNH was part of the first generation of settlement houses in the United States, and today it serves the diverse community of Cambridge and beyond.

To join and learn more about the Margaret Fuller Society, please visit our website. The website includes information about events, conferences, resources, and an archive of Fuller scholarship. In addition, the website includes our extended newsletter, "Conversations."

You are invited to join at:

<http://margaretfullersociety.org>.

